

PLEASE
DON'T BURN

Radiator

Radiator opens with all fires lit.
Every following weekend,
all are welcome, friends and strangers alike, to gather around a different hearth.

Beneath a cloud of gathering smoke, the thermostat lies.
A fire is burning. Another dies out.

Conduction, convection.
Bodies gather.

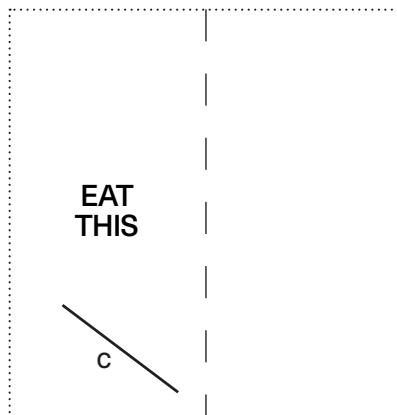

On the waterfront, a pile of ashes.

019 no longer finds itself at the edge of town: residential towers, supermarkets, banks, gas stations, playgrounds and parking lots envelop the building. At the same time, 019's program is moving into public space more and more. It begs the question what this building is, what its function might be in a landscape that is no longer post-industrial but gentrified. The former welding factory is integrated in the zoning plan for the Oude Dokken as a building with a public function that both supports and complements the new (residential) developments. These are attempts at finding out what this public function could be: a series of exhibitions and interventions that delve into the potential of a perforated building.

019 ligt niet langer aan de rand van de stad: woontorens, supermarkten, banken, benzinestations, speeltuinen en parkings omringen het gebouw. Het programma van 019 verplaatst zich steeds meer naar de openbare ruimte. Het roept de vraag op wat dit gebouw is en welke functie het kan vervullen in een postindustrieel en gegentrificeerd landschap. De voormalige lasfabriek is opgenomen in het bestemmingsplan voor de Oude Dokken als een gebouw met een publieke functie dat de nieuwe (woon)ontwikkelingen ondersteunt en aanvult. Radiator maakt deel uit van een reeks pogingen om te achterhalen wat deze publieke functie zou kunnen zijn: een reeks tentoonstellingen en interventies die de mogelijkheden onderzoekt van een geperforeerd gebouw.
