A canopy is both decoration and direction. While façades remain aligned with the street, canopies project outward, performing identity in public space. They give buildings character and communicate what kind of experience awaits inside.

Situated on a street known for its Turkish restaurants, the exhibition reflects on how ideas of elsewhere are constructed through visual cues. Through four canopies, colour, typography and ornament become shorthand for place.

Mounted on the gallery wall, the canopies remain suspended between architecture and image, carrying the associations of the places from which they emerged. They are defined not by their capacity to shelter an entrance or a terrace, but by their capacity to signify.

Egon Van Herreweghe relocates the visual language of brands and products into the exhibition space. By producing everyday objects and commissioning the fabrication of his works, he questions authenticity, value, and authorship.
